TALKING TO CHILDREN ABOUT VIOLENCE

Few events hit home for children and families like a school shooting. When children see such an event on television or on Web-based news flashes, it is natural for them to worry about their own school and their own safety, particularly if the violence occurred nearby or in a neighboring city or state.

Talk to your children

Parents should acknowledge to children that bad things do happen, but also reassure them with the information that many people are working to keep them safe, including their parents, teachers and local police.

Limit exposure to news coverage

Parents should also monitor how much exposure a child has to news reports of traumatic events, including these recent school shootings. Research has shown that some young children believe that the events are reoccurring each time they see a television replay of the news footage.

Know the warning signs

Parents should be alert to any signs of anxiety that might suggest that a child or teenager might need more assistance. Such indicators could be a change in the child's school performance, changes in relationships with peers and teachers, excessive worry, school refusal, sleeplessness, nightmares, headaches or stomachaches, or loss of interest in activities that the child used to enjoy.

Every child will respond to trauma differently. Some will have no ill effects; others may suffer an immediate and acute effect. Still others may not show signs of stress until sometime after the event.

WESTON UNIVERSITY PROGRAM

A Look at Law Enforcement from the Inside Out with BSO Weston

The fifth program day of the Weston University Class of 2018 program provided participants with the chance to get a perspective of police work by spending a day with the Broward Sheriff's Office. City Manager John R. Flint and Captain Kevin Butler, of the BSO Weston District, greeted the students in the morning. The students were then taken to the tactical training area and shooting range at Markham Park to see how deputies train for their line of work. Following lunch, the students met with SWAT and Crime Scene at City Hall. Deputy Kari Pallotto led the group's activities throughout the day.

Law Enforcement Day with the Weston University Program

TACTICAL TRAINING WITH BSO

Students participated in a hands-on training exercise, learning how to safely execute a search operation to rescue a reported hostage using blue training guns as props, as well as targets in each room that provided a “shoot, don’t shoot” training scenario.

K-9's AND TRAINING EXERCISES WITH WESTON UNIVERSITY

K-9 Deputies introduced one of the several K-9's that work in the Broward Sheriff's Office with a bite demonstration. They also spoke about the handler/dog relationship and the training that both go through to be an effective K-9 unit.

Students also witnessed a firearms demonstration at the BSO shooting range.

CRIME SCENE WORK WITH BSO

The day ended with students learning some of the techniques used to process crime scenes, such as swabbing for DNA and lifting fingerprints from a vehicle.

They also learned about the BSO S.W.A.T. Team and its armored vehicle and tactical response tools.
